SCA publishes Annual Report for 2020 with long-term sustainability targets

SCA has today published the company's Annual Report for the year 2020. The report presents for the first time long-term targets for the company's sustainability performance. SCA also presents its program for preserving the biodiversity in the company's forests.

SCA has established sustainability targets to be achieved by 2030. One of the targets is to increase the company's climate benefit by 50 per cent to 15 Million tonnes of carbon dioxide per year.

SCA also presents its program for preserving the biodiversity in the company's forests. SCA seeks the best way to combine active forest management with a rich flora and fauna in the forest. SCA has identified 203 species that are adversely impacted by forestry activities when applying general nature conservation measures and for which the company takes particular responsibility. This includes identifying, preserving or restoring habitats for these and other vulnerable species.

The program "Delivering Biodiversity Conservation – An SCA initiative" is presented on SCA's web site.
